Comments:

Adopting alternative D is the environmentally responsible option. The best available scientific information supports strengthening and adopting this alternative with enforceable standards for American bison, big horn sheep, and threatened grizzly bears. Conserving American bison's viability and diversity should be a forest wide standard. American bison should be free to roam national forests. We must adopt a standard to close and not permit cattle grazing allotments in any American bison Range.

We must restore more wetlands, creeks, pond edges, and riparian habitat through strong standards and more yearly projects to benefit American bison and native species diversity.

The Custer Gallatin has a duty to fulfill its responsibilities and trust obligations safeguarding treaty rights, sacred species, sacred sites, and traditional cultural places of significance to aboriginal people.
