Comments:

I live in Bozeman and use trails in the area extensively--primarily on my mountain bike. For one, I support the Gallatin Forest Partnership Agreement as it represents all the user groups in the area. Second, I support continued bicycle access to Lionhead. The Lionhead area has been extensively maintained by mountain bikers and I think allowing users to access remote areas is a great way to appreciate and subsequently protect them. Bikes are a low-impact way to access remote terrain. I would also suggest and support continuing to manage recommended wilderness to allow bicycle access. Bicyclists do their part to tread lightly and appreciate wild places. They should be allowed to do so until it is officially wilderness.
