To whom it may concern:

I highly value wild places. I want them to be protected and preserved for generations to come. I also want people to be able to experience these wild places. I do not believe, generally, in a blanket way, that bikes should be excluded. Oftentimes, these places are too rugged to bike anyway, but some trails are doable, if only by the most determined, slow rolling, back to nature type riders. These zealots share the same spirit as hikers, trail runners, horse riders, and wilderness conservationists and if they are allowed to experience the forest they remain motivated to protect it.

I hope you consider bicycles in your revision plans.

Sincerely,
